It is scarcely possible any longer to entertain an official gathering without the house boasts at least one large unincumbered room, easy to get in and as easy to get out of. It need not necessarily be a ball room, if when the time came it could not also be conveniently turned into a dining room. For the great crowds which must be invited to any house whose hosts desire popularity there is a great deal more necessity for plenty of eating space than for opportunities to dance. Happy are those who can provide both, for by that means they can entertain both the early and the late comers. The late Mrs. Whitney solved that problem better than any hostess who ever achieved social laurels here. Her invitation list went up into the hundreds, and between 9:30 and midnight the entire house was thronged. After midnight most of the early comers, having enjoyed a good supper, were quite willing to bid their charming hostess goodnight. Going out they met those who were coming in for the ball and the supper that, perved comfortably at small tables, made the night pass only too swiftly till 3 and 4 o'clock, when the last guests reluctantly made their adieus.

Representative Bourke Cockran is evidently going in for entertaining on a more elaborate style than heretofore. His residence on 16th street would seem to be big enough for ordinary purposes, but before next season Mrs. Cockran hopes to greet her friends in a new ball room, which is now being added to the house. The addition is to be forty feet square, and it goes without saying that it will be one of the best equipped rooms for large entertainments among the official homes of this city.

The new wing of the German embassy, now fast approaching completion, contains a spacious room that can be used either as a picture gallery, a banquet hall or a ball room. Very likely it will at different times answer all these purposes. It is expected that Baron Saurma-Jeltsch will entertain handsomely, and his government did a wise thing in providing him with an embassy so arranged that he could do so with comfort and elegance.

Mr. and Mrs. Leiter's big white house Mr. and Mrs. Leiter's big white house there. A Brazilian minister lived there, and the Argentine minister, Mr. Dominguez, whose son is now to marry the California heiress, Miss Helene Murphy, occupied the house during his term. Mrs. Dunn, widow of Gen. Dunn, who last owned the property, and ex-Governor Carroll who was her tenant from season to season, each made the house conspicuous by the elegant hospitality they have shown their friends in the house.

For the present it is not intended to entirely demolish the house. Only half will be pulled down and the remainder will serve as a rectory until the full plan of the church is completed. The inner main portion of the edifice will be built first. In the completed plan this will be surrounded by chapels. Several of the rich and influential members of St. Matthew's parish have signified their desire to defray the cost of a chapel, and it is more than likely that all of them will be built by different persons as memorials. Among others, Mrs. Henry May intends to build a chapel as a memorial to her mother, Mrs. Coleman, who died a year ago in Europe, and Miss Helen Carroll, a daughter of ex-Gov. Carroll, who inherited a large fortune from her mother, will build another.

Those who have not settled the momentous question of which roof shall cover them the next four years find the idle days very useful for that purpose, and as the ladies keep up everyday friendly visiting amongst themselves there are not many of their plans for the coming season but that each understands and approves. Mr. and Mrs. Leiter's big white house will be occupied this winter by the family, but the chances are that the season will be far advanced before the final touches make it entirely habitable for them. As the family is in deep mourning, their first winter in their palatial residence will undoubtedly be a quiet one, very much different from what they expected. There is, perhaps, no house here quite as large, and certainly none better adapted for elegant living and entertainment than this house, which has been in course of erection for nearly three years. It would create no surprise if, in view of their inability to take any part in the social life of the winter, that the house would remain unoccupied for another year, and before the family take possession to have the permanent decoration entirely finished.

Another fine residence which will surely be occupied by the family this winter will be the artistic and comfortable house

Now, today the proposition is that we shall undervalue gold over 40 per cent. If tion we can hardly be a monometallic nation.

The next difficulty which we have to meet is the assertion that by the repeal of the Sherman act we increase the burden of the debt upon the borrower. This would certainly be a very grave misfortune, if it were true. Borrowing and lending marries money and brains to the great advancement of the world. If we were to make a law which only related to a single series of transactions, such as now exist in the United States, it might possibly be an advantage to the borrower to have the payment so adjusted that he would have the advantage of the transaction; but when the present race of borrowers is dead, or when the present borrowers have paid their money, there will still be forever a borrowing and a lending world. which pressed itself upon the people was the fact that there was a continuous and unaccountable drain of gold.

When suspicion and doubt of that kind once enter the minds of 65,000,000 people, there is no knowing where it will end. That it took serious possession of them is shown by the simple fact that out of the United States banking houses alone $190,000,000 of deposits were drawn by depositors from all parts of the country. How much was drawn out of state banks and out of trust companies, how much has been drawn out of savings banks no one will ever probably know; but so much has been drawn, so much has been hoarded, so much has been drawn, so much has been hoarded, so much has been drawn, so much has been hoarded, so much has been drawn, so much has been hoarded, so much has been drawn, so much has been hoarded, so much has been drawn, so much has been hoarded, so much has been drawn, so much has been hoarded, so much has been drawn, so much has been hoarded, so much has been drawn, so much has been hoarded, so much has been drawn, so much has been hoarded, so much has been drawn, so much has been hoarded, so much has been drawn, so much has been hoarded, so much has been drawn, so much has been hoarded, so much has been drawn, so much has been hoarded, so much has been drawn, so helve the proposition to lower the ratio is the one good sign of this discussion. To drop from the bigoted determination that 16 to 1 is a heaven appointed ratio, raised up by the Almighty, and proceed even to discussion, and for that purpose only, I am quite free to admit that protection is a tax, wicked and iniquitous. For the purpose of discussion, and for that purpose only, I am quite free to admit that protection is a fraud and that virtue resides only in a recommendation. The bid by the so swers would be no. And this ground they would take without abating a jot their determination to coin and use both metals. With $600,000,000 of silver already in circuis tion we can hardly be a monometallic na smocracy that protection is a tax, wicked and iniquitous. For the purpose of discussion, and for that purpose only, I am quite free to admit that purpose only. Whether that change is to be for the better or not no man can know themselves, and hence they are not able to impart it to others. For my part I do not expect the democratic party to be utterly bad. I do not believe they will be permitted to go so if they should so desire. Such is the restraining influence of the people, even after election, that I believe that the poople, even after election, that I believe that the poople, even after election, that I believe that the people, even after the disguises, through all that through all the disguises, through all that through all the people, nevertheless those wishes of the people, even after the disguises, through all that the probability of the provided out. to the condition of the workmen under the Walker tariff, but that there will be doubts and difficulties and reductions I have not the slightest doubt. It is evident, then, from what I have said that two questions must be settled, as the indispensable preliminary of our arrival at that period when prosperity will commence again. With the settlement of the question of tariff I shall undertake to have nothing to do today; that will come at its proper time, when people begin to realize that that is the serious matter which underlies this whole situation. For the present, we have another question before us, and one which we will have to determine upon its merits.

While I am in favor of the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman act, and have always been, since the failure of that act to realize the hopes of the men who believed in a silver currency, I do not think that the repeal of that act will be an immediate cause of the revival of the prosperity of this country. I am in favor of its repeal, however, for two reasons. First, it seems to me to be deeply settled in the public mind, from causes which can be easily understood, that the Sherman law is the cause of the unreasonable hoarding of currency throughout this country.

in the earnest hope that what they desired might turn out to be just and right, were in no condition to defend it at all. It had not answered their hopes. Wherever there is an attack upon one side and no defense on the other, there is sure to be a very shining victory. Hence, the popular mind is so filled with the idea that the existence of the purchasing clause of the Sherman law is an element of disorder that if we remove it we shall do more to restore confidence than anything we can do in the world. What would a restoration of confidence in this country mean just now? It would not mean, in my judgment, a revival at once of business prosperity, but it would be a tremendous relief to those who are endeavoring to carry on the business of this country without bankruptcy and disaster.

It is sometimes customary here to make remarks indicative of great contenut and hatred of banks and of corporations. I expect during the next year of two to hear a great many such declarations. In this country corporations are sometimes brutal.

I say to you now that in my judgment the banks of this country are doing a patriotic and honorable work, and are, at this moment, the mainstay of this country against failure and future disaster.

But I am in favor of the repeal of this act for another reason. I am desitors not only of weathering this storm with as few salls blown to pieces as possible, but I sm also looking for the upward movement, which is sure to come, and which can only be postponed by bad management and bad actions. It is sometimes the fashion to severy contemptuous of foreign capital, but it is as sure as the rising of tomorrow's sun that when we take our next upward turn, sit will be by the aid and assistance not only of the capital of the United States, but of the capital of the whole world.

So my two reasons for voting for the repeal are, first, that it will restore confidence to the people, and in some measure help us out of the first difficulties of our position; and, second, when the time comes it will assist u Mrs. BRIDGET MORIARTY, in the ele-seventh year of her age, widow of the Michael Moriarty and mother of James riarty of this city and Mrs. Murphy of La-burg, Va.
